Sunday Mass Readings

To help us listen to as much Sacred Scripture as possible during Sunday Mass, the Sunday Mass readings follow a three-year cycle. So, apart from feasts like Christmas, you will not hear the same readings again for another three years. Every three years we cover the most important parts of the Bible. To pick the Gospels as an example: we read Matthew in Year A as we call it, we read Mark in Year B as we call it, and we read Luke in Year C as we call it, which is this year, and these liturgical years commence on the First Sunday of Advent. We read John during almost half the Sundays of Lent, all the Sundays of Easter, the second Sunday in Ordinary Time every year, during five Sundays near the end of the summer during Mark's year (17th - 21st Sunday Year B), and again on the thirty-fourth Sunday of Year B. So, we get to hear as much as possible of the most important parts of the four Gospels during Sundays every three years.

The first reading is always from the Old Testament (except during Easter when it is from the Acts of the Apostles). When the first reading is from the Old Testament, you should be able to see a connection between the first reading and Gospel—something in the first reading from the Old Testament anticipates or is fulfilled in the Gospel.

The Psalm is a prayerful response to the first reading.

The second reading is from one of Paul's letters or the Letter to the Hebrews or the Letter of James, except during Easter when the second reading is from Peter's first letter in Year A, from John's first letter in Year B, and from the Book of Revelation in Year C. We read their excerpts sequentially.

There is also a cycle of readings for daily Masses, but it is very different to that for Sunday Masses.
